Closing doors, in hindsight, protected the community. Let's see what the company says. It limited CEL being on the market for short sellers to kill the company, which the shorters are trying to execute, to kill @CelsiusNetwork.

16/16 the evidence I see corroborates what @CelsiusNetworkis says and they show more proof that we Celsiusians were targeted and attacked, the fair thing to do is do what Wall Street Bets retail investors did and buy CEL token to $3 and bankrupt the shorters who did this to us.

15/16 I think Celsius simply has liquidity issues, meaning the 20% they put aside for withdrawals got exhausted and they have to call back loans. I could be wrong, but that's what I see. This is an attack from Wall Street hedge funds on Celsiusians, similar to GameStop AMC, and if

14/16 These are just my thoughts from what I can see. If you were to ask me, I would say that we get our coins back. That's my personal opinion based on what I see, mainly the coordinated attack and causing a bank run on Celsius and Celsius surviving their all-out attack.

13/16 on Maker, which if they were able to liquidate that, it would be a devastating blow to Celsius. But Celsius added collateral, to their chagrin, and brought that #Bitcoin liquidation to $14,000, making it a stretch to liquidate that Maker loan.

12/16 all 18.5M CEL to @FTX_Official that they borrowed, because there's simply not enough liquidity on CEL token for them to buy 18.5M CEL on the open market. Also, they tried to short #Bitcoin down to $23,000 to liquidate 17,00+ Bitcoin @CelsiusNetwork have as collateral

10/16 offering anyone with CEL token 2,600% APY yesterday to borrow their CEL tokens. In hindsight, @CelsiusNetwork pausing withdrawals is a good move, which means no one can sell their CEL token or lend them to @FTX_Official, which put the shorters in a worse position.

 8.5 million CEL still have to be bought and repaid to FTX by the shorters. I don't know where they'll get 8.5 million CEL tokens to buy in this environment. And they're willing to still pay 2,600% for those tokens. Every other coin is 0.88% to 8%, at the highest for CAD.

 Not to mention them trying to liquidate Celsius of 24,000 BTC and Celsius had to add collateral to bring the liquidation from $23,000 down to $14,000. So these guys are organized, but they didn't do due diligence to see no liquidity on CEL. They just want revenge from UST debacle
